

Dr. Denise I. Bossy is the North American editor-in-chief of Ethnohistory and associate professor of history at the University of North Florida, where she teaches courses on Florida, local Indigenous history, and the Native South. She earned her Ph.D., M.Phil., and M.A. from Yale and her B.A. from Princeton University. Her research focuses on the Indigenous history of the early Southeast. Her recent publications include the special issue of the Florida Historical Quarterly “Indigenous Florida” which she co-edited with Andrew Frank (January 2022); winner of the Arthur W. Thompson Award from the Florida Historical Society. In 2019 her anthology The Yamasee Indians: From Florida to South Carolina (University of Nebraska Press, 2018) was the recipient of the William L. Proctor Award from the Historic St. Augustine Research Institute. This edited volume had its start at Flagler College, where she convened a two-day conference on the Yamasee Indians in 2015. She is currently completing the first definitive study of the Yamasee Indians. Tentatively entitled Yamasee (Yvmvse): Indigenous Mobility and Power in the Early South this project was funded in part by a yearlong NEH fellowship and is under contract with the Omohundro Institute, University of North Carolina Press. She is also writing Heca Utimile (Our Land): An Indigenous History of Northeast Florida with UNF archaeologist Keith Ashley. This newest project focuses on the deep history of the Timucua-speaking Mocamas, Guales, and Yamasees. Heca Utimile is aimed at educating the broader public and at bridging the gap between cutting edge research and public representations of local Indigenous history. This newest project focuses on the deep history of the Timucua-speaking Mocamas, Guales, and Yamasees and is being funded by a three-year NEH collaborative research grant. Heca Utimile is aimed at educating the broader public and at bridging the gap between cutting edge research and public representations of local Indigenous history. An accompanying digital humanities project, designed in partnership with UNF students, is available on their website: <https://indigenousflorida.domains.unf.edu/>.